Invesco Trimark challenges advisors nationwide to rethink risk;

Professional Development returns for 11th year

Toronto, September 14, 2009 – Continuing its long-standing commitment to advisor education, Invesco Trimark is asking financial advisors nationwide to think about risk in a new light at its Professional Development 2009 sessions.

Now in its 11th year, Professional Development is Invesco Trimark's premier education event for investment professionals. Commencing tomorrow, the program will travel across 24 Canadian cities and will conclude on November 12, 2009.

"Believing that investors are best served by a skilled and knowledgeable financial advisor, we are excited to be visiting advisors across the country to provide practical tools and advice they can use with their clients," said Scott McLean, Senior Vice President, Retail Sales at Invesco Trimark. "Partnering with advisors has always been one of our top priorities."

This year, attendees can expect:

- Insights from thought leaders in macroeconomics, portfolio construction and practice management
- To discover what Invesco Trimark portfolio managers have learned from the current recession, how their portfolios are positioned to move forward and why they're optimistic about the future
- Actionable tax and estate planning tips
- Practical tools and strategies to grow their business and maximize their clients' success
- Keynote speakers: author/business coach Michael Port in Calgary and leadership/performance expert Dr. J.P. Pawliw-Fry in Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver
